795 of the Lithuanian survivors. Lithuania is still "the most loyal Daughter of Rome in the North of Europe," in the words of the late Pope Pius XI.

661 798 The Russians continue their practice of subjecting the Catholic clergy to periodic and systematic "questioning," accompanied by physical torture and threats. Several priests became apostates. Most of the others were killed in torture chambers or exiled to Siberia, while several dozen priests enlisted with the patriotic guerrillas. Retired emiriti priests were called back to duty—as each priest must now serve 3 to 5 parishes.

874 661 798 One seminary remained for a few years. The number of divinity students was limited to 150. Professors and students were repeatedly summoned to the MVD-MGB and subjected to "pressure" and tortures in order to enlist them as agent-informers. Seminary rectors and their assistants were arrested and exiled as soon as they assumed duties. Students attended classes in churches. They were shadowed and threatened, and their number steadily dwindled as the MVD exercised more "pressure." By 1947, the number of divinity students dropped to 60. Normally 30 to 40 priests die annually of natural causes, but only 7-8 priests were graduated annually to replace the deceased. Finally, during the winter of 1947-48, the seminary was closed.

798 659 661 The surviving priests (about 400 as of the fall of 1948) could discourse on Scriptural texts in their sermons—always mindful that MVD agents were taking down notes and that suspicious Russians in the MVD-MGB offices would summon them to enlarge on translations of the suspect imputed allegories. Attacks on the Church in the official press, over the radio and at mass meetings cannot be answered or discussed: that would be "propaganda." The Stalin constitution warrants freedom of the anti-religious propaganda and of "religious belief,"—not of religious "propaganda."

Priests are continually exposed to provocation. For instance, MVD agents go to "confession" in order to provoke some remark by the priest. Sometimes a priest is summoned "to give last rites to a dying person." When the priest arrives, the "dying person" impersonated by a provocateur becomes a "guerrilla" ("bandit") and the clergyman is arrested "for association with bandits." Priests are forced to disrobe in MVD offices and to be photographed with MVD "girls." Afterward the photographs are circulated among the people. Nevertheless, the faithful are not easily misled by the alien oppressor whom every Lithuanian despises.

In 1947 there was a large scale massacre of the faithful at Kretinga when someone rang the bells of the Franciscan monastery at the time the Russians came to close it. The running people saw Russian troops bringing out the bleeding bayoneted body of a priest. Infuriated, the Lithuanians attacked the Russians with stones and bats. The Russians fired indiscriminately at the mob. . . .

No religious literature—no catechisms, missals, discourses, etc.—is printed: no paper is allotted by the government—and all printing places are state-operated. No priests are permitted to enter hospitals, schools, barracks and prisons to administer the sacraments. The priests enter gaols only as prisoners.

Since 1947, the Russians attacked the Church from another angle—clamoring against the Vatican and demanding creation of a "national Catholic Church."

798 661 Priests were repeatedly summoned and urged to break with "the fascist Vatican"—or be imprisoned for "espionage" and contact with "the Vatican intelligence." In several parishes pastors were arrested and apostate priests installed, without the Bishop's blessing. Bishop's representatives were barred. Local communist officials became ardent and regular "church-goers"—but no one else went there and the Russian venture died a natural death.

659 794 Finally, the Soviet authorities engaged in what may be the final duel between the Church and the militant atheism: decrees were published placing all "cultural monuments," viz. church structures, under the supervision of the government. The authorities attempt to impose the so-called "dvadsatkas"—committees of 20 members—on each parish to supervise the needs for repairs, pastor's functions, etc. One half of these committeemen are appointed by the government. As to the rest—no specific regulations are disclosed. These "committees" would have the power to dismiss pastors and accept replacements—in effect, they would nullify the episcopal authority and would control every activity of the faithful. To further weaken the opposition, the Bishops were seized and incoming administrators subjected to pressure and deprived of the means of communicatnig with the parishes.

The faithful realize the objective—the clandestine press forewarned them and coupled threats of reprisals against weakening persons together with the explanation of the real meaning of the Russian action. Under such strained conditions, churches go unrepaired rather than enjoy "government assistance" in exchange for acceptance of a "dvadsatka." Priests summoned before the MVD refer the officials to the Canonic Law of the Church and direct the Russians to discuss the matter with the Bishops.

A native traitor and atheist, Gailevičius, a former superintendent of NKVD prisons, is presently the "Commissar for Cult Affairs of the Lithuanian SSR." In January 1949 he published a decree in his capacity as custodian of "cultural monuments": churches must not "operate" within 7 kilometers of each other, and if several churches are found within the 7 km. radius, only one church is to be left "operating" and the other churches are to be shut down for use by the state.

In theory, this decree could scarcely affect rural churches. An intolerable situation is arising in cities, however. For instance, there are 17 churches and several chapels in the city of Kaunas. Under this decree, only one church would remain in this city of 150,000 inhabitants, of whom 60% are Lithuanian Catholics. A similar situation is bound to arise in the capital city of Vilnius with its dozens of beautiful churches, or "cultural monuments."

Serious clashes, or rather massacres of women and children, are expected to result during the forcible seizure and closing of the churches to which the foreign invader has no title.

The Italian press recently cited "reliable sources" of January 1949 to the effect that the Russians had confiscated the Cathedral Basilica of Vilnius and converted the edifice into a dance hall. This cannot be verified from Lithuanian sources at this time—but the Gailevičius decree makes this news probable.

Religious Practices

798 659 Since the fall of 1947, the Russians abandoned tolerance of the strictly religious functions of the faithful—adults attending church and receiving sacraments. The radio, press and tens of thousands of professional agitators are engaged in blasphemous atheistic propaganda aimed at discrediting the religion as "outdated witchcraft and prejudice" and attributing "fascist conspiracy" to the Vatican. This meant that the first attempt to create a "national Church" by subverting clergy and imposing "dvadsatkas" failed. But the effort was not abandoned.

Vatican, British and American broadcasts are heard —and the more important developments are relayed to the population by the clandestine press. Needless to say that the Lithuanians, facing daily the official attack on their Church and their Catholicism, are very saddened and embittered by the complete silence abroad over the martyrdom of Lithuania—compared with the publicity given the staged trials of various Church dignitaries in the satellite countries. They especially resent the omission of Lithuania from among the Catholic nations listed in foreign broadcasts as victimized by Soviet armed atheism.

All monasteries are shut down and friars-nuns dispersed. Catechetic instruction is banned from schools, the armed forces and from private tutoring within a family circle. In 1946 the Bishops had requested the authorities to permit catechetic instruction of school-age children in church structures but the authorities refused. The parents themselves presently prepare their children for the first communion.

[626] Church-goers are watched by MVD agents conspicuously posted near church doorways, and they are shadowed and questioned. Arrests were repeatedly made inside churches by armed cap-wearing MVD gangsters who loudly profane the churches. All state employees—and all people are state employees with the exception of the "kulaks" or independent smallholders refusing to go into "artels"—receive strict warnings to stop attending religious services ("witchcraft sessions"), or their conduct will be construed as a "demonstration of disloyalty to the existing order."

Students developed a spontaneous custom: on the way to schools they stop in a church to pray. The authorities strive to eradicate this custom by summoning their parents and threatening to expel children from

659 schools. Teachers who openly attended churches were
● 798 summarily dismissed.

In spite of all these restrictions and threats, churches
[771] are well attended, especially in rural areas. Church-goers are mostly women and people not connected with government offices and concerns, less dependent on the bureaucracy. Intellectuals and officials travel to distant places where they are not known personally to attend Mass or for confession. Rural churches, further from cities or where only small MGB-MVD garrisons are stationed, draw the largest attendance.

Religious processions on streets were not banned officially but few people dared to show themselves publicly and face the jeers of the armed blaspheming Russians and a few native traitors. The clergy discouraged public processions exposing the faithful to unnecessary [585] persecution.

Marriages are registered by local Executive Committees. Those who so desire may go through a religious ceremony but a religious ceremony is not recognized by the authorities. Marriages contracted prior to the Russian invasion were not questioned, however.

Several small Protestant congregations are still in existence in the Klaipėda District, but most of the Protestant churches were shut down and converted to other use for lack of communicants. The Calvinist churches of Biržai and Prienai were turned into military horse stables. Protestants are more or less tolerated, because the Protestant Church offers no problem to the occupant.

The pre-war Russian settlers, natives of Lithuania, regularly attend the MVD-dominated Orthodox churches. The new settlers go to churches occasionally out of curiosity.

Since the end of 1947, persons exhibiting religious icons and crucifixes in their homes came under persecution. Religious pictures and statuettes found in homes by the armed searching parties infuriate the Russians and their stooges. Religious objects are smashed, bayoneted, spat upon and trampled by the puny "masters of the world" raging against their Creator.

Living quarters of the pastors—"cult servants"—
[65] were requisitioned by the housing authorities and a small nook was assigned to priests. Churches are assessed with exorbitant taxes. Complaints are answered: "If you can't meet state obligations—close up shop." The faithful exerted every effort to contribute the necessary funds and in most cases the tax levies were met. Thereupon the Russians demanded lists of contributors. The pastors answered that they did not list plate contributors—and were arrested and threatened with prosecution for "failure to account from public funds." A number of churches were unable to meet the levies, as all of the people are burdened with excessive taxes, requisitions and perennial "voluntarily assumed contributions to the state" imposed by the armed militiamen.

000 It is not known whether, since comrade Gailevičius claimed all churches as "cultural monuments" subject to his custody, churches would be taxed—that is, churches left "operating."

A church is the only place where a tortured people could find spiritual solace and escape from the blaring loudspeakers and mad ravings of the Russian oppressor.

tactics in combatting religion.

Soviet Methods

Dr. Ladas Natkevičius, the late Lithuanian Minister to the Kremlin, was asked by Stalin in 1939, during the so-called "negotiations for a Mutual Assistance Pact," how great was the influence of the clergy in Lithuania. When he was told that the clergy of all Christian denominations enjoy great authority among the faithful, the Generalissimo thoughtfully remarked —"That is very important to know."

At the time the remark passed unnoticed. A Soviet invasion was not anticipated because of the frequently professed Soviet friendship for Lithuania and Lithuania's excellent record in discharging all treaty obligations.

But the significance of this remark was quite apparent when Justas Paleckis, the puppet "president of Soviet Lithuania," bade farewell to Dr. Hildebrandt, a noted German newspaperman. Paleckis told the departing German quite frankly that he had received instructions from the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. to apply no direct pressure on the clergy.

The Soviet regime always fought religion and its institutions, but its tactical methods were different during both occupations.

The First Occupation—Oppression at Full Tempo

Immediately after the first total occupation of the Baltic States in June 1940, uniform steps were applied by the three satraps of the Kremlin dispatched to liquidate the sovereign Republics: Vice-Commissar for Foreign Affairs Dekanozov in Lithuania, Deputy-Commissar for Foreign Affairs Vyshynsky in Latvia and Politbureau member Zhdanov in Estonia. The Concordats with the Vatican were abruptly and unilaterally broken off and the Papal Nunzios were expelled.

Then followed the elimination of religion from public life. The Catholic and Protestant Theology-Philosophy Faculties of the University of Lithuania at Kaunas were closed; all Catholic cultural, educational and social welfare organizations, newspapers and publishing concerns were abolished and their properties confiscated; teaching of religion was eliminated from schools; army, school, hospital and prison chaplains were summarily dismissed; crucifixes and other religious insignia were removed from schools, courts and public places and desecrated.

Then came the application of the nationalization decree: buildings, landholdings, workshops, libraries, private hospitals and schools, orphanages, kindergar-

[423] tens and personal property owned by institutions and organizations of a religious character were sequestered. 798 In nationalizing land, parishes were given only 3 hectares—although other landlords retained 30 hectares. 661 Buildings owned by parishes and bishoprics, including episcopal residences and seminaries, libraries, printing shops, printed stocks of books were confiscated. Denominational grammar schools, high schools, orphanages, kindergartens and hospitals were converted into state institutions. The stocks of missals, hymnals, prayer-books, rosaries, religious pictures, and other religious articles found stored in book shops and retail stores were desecrated or destroyed.

793 The Soviets considered the clergy a separate "caste," 651 antagonistic to the proletariat and, therefore, to be eliminated. The clergy as well as independent farmers 661 (called 'kulaks'), were oppressed economically; priests and "cult servants" were heavily taxed. For instance, a tolerated "proletarian" with a monthly income of 200 rubles paid 30 rubles monthly for living space assigned to him, while "cult servants" of the same income class paid 220 rubles monthly, and those with incomes of 350 rubles paid 388 rubles.

651 The Communist Party proposed to levy excessive 665 license fees on churches, similar to motion picture 661 house and cabaret assessments. The taxes depended on the size of the church. Such taxes were already imposed in the sections of Poland annexed to Russia—20,000 to 50,000 rubles. A commissar explained the policy to a pastor of a Lithuanian parish in eastern Lithuania which was annexed by Russia in 1939: "If you can't pay—close down your shop." Consequently, the churches were to be closed by degrees for nonpayment of taxes.

798 The Party also passed a decision to convert the cen- 665 trally located Garrison Church of Kaunas into a "Rev- 661 olutionary Museum." The Museum of Church Art was liquidated and its exhibits, the antique vestments, were used by Red Army troopers to polish their boots.

All that was public anti-religious action. The other phase, shrouded in secrecy, was directed against individual members of the clergy.

The Party instructed its agents to disrupt the internal discipline of churchmen, to enlist agent-informers among the clergymen, to antagonize priests against each other or to compromise them. NKGB Major Gladkov issued a secret directive dated 21 October 1940, directed to all county security chiefs, to institute unbroken surveillance of priests, church employees, friars and nuns, and to enlist students of upper classes for espionage on the private lives of the clergymen. "Remember that some of the priests are not provided for materially and are wavering in their ideological outlook." The secret order of 21 January 1941 directed particular attention to individual discontent and antagonism among members of religious organizations: advantage should be taken of such incidents to disrupt the organizations.

793 After digesting the reports of weakness exhibited by 659 some individual priests, People's Commissar of Jus- 661 tice, Pranas Pakarklis, a native traitor, offered attractive offices to a number of priests, on condition that

2:Anonymous U-4 (no date)1947 RB5 Lithuanians RB5

793 659 661 they discontinue holding Mass and stop the performance of other priestly duties. A number of priests were arrested and the NKVD attempted to enlist their services by threats and blackmail. Because of these methods, several priests consented—and, immediately after their release, fled abroad. Those refusing to become agents were imprisoned. Soon the number of prisoners grew as many friars, preachers and high school students heroically defended their faith.

626 527 461 The Russians initiated a campaign against religious traditions. They began by banning the traditional Corpus Christi processions in the streets. All Saints Day was declared to be a working day, and the authorities banned traditional services and mass visits to cemeteries on All Souls' Day. During Advent and Lent, the bolsheviks encouraged dancing, entertainment and anti-religious lectures. Good Friday and Holy Saturday, as well as the second day of Easter, were designated working days. Those failing to report for work on the second day of Easter were prosecuted. In general, at frequent intervals, ordinary Sundays were periodically declared to be working days, and Saturdays—days of rest.

876 626 [883] The teaching of religion in schools was replaced by classes on biology and the Stalin constitution. Biological lectures popularized "Darwinism." The "science of constitution" was to popularize a "Soviet democracy" and its oft-varying shifts directed by party line. In place of religious sodalities and athletic groups, the bolsheviks attempted to form "Komsomol" (Communist Youth) nests directed by political instructors called "Komsorg." Religious sermons were replaced by anti-religious tirades in the communist-controlled press and at mass meetings. Attendance at such mass-meetings to hear blasphemies was made compulsory.

626 661 558 Churches kept open and functioning. However, attendants at religious services were terrorized. The Party posted uniformed and non-uniformed spies at church doors to observe and list the churchgoers. Attendance in church was a sufficient reason for dismissal from higher offices.

000 The anti-religious drive, growing in tempo, began to expand. When Bishops Brizgys and Ramanauskas called on Pozdniakov, the former Soviet Minister to Lithuania and at present the Kremlin's deputy satrap, to ask for the return of the premises of the Theological Seminary, the Russian attempted to "reason" with them. Pozdniakov stated that they should have no illusions: what had been accomplished in Russia in 20 years, will be achieved in Lithuania within two to three years by experienced administrators. Why should the Seminary "delude" young men? By the time they became priests, there would be no duties to perform—in Russia the priests already have nothing to do. . . .

Lithuanian Resistance to the Anti-Religious Drive

798 771 The Lithuanians had suffered much for religion—murder, imprisonment and exile to Siberia—during the Tsarist Russian occupation. True to tradition, resistance against the anti-religious drive developed into a spontaneous and united movement. The defense of religion embraced even persons who had formerly neglected the church and seemed to be indifferent.

22a

Churches were filled to capacity. A former female communist stated that the church was the only place where one could relax physically, without having to listen to the maddening bolshevik agitation.

Mass singing in churches became a new and precious experience—a plea for help from a persecuted and dying people.

On All Souls' night, the cemeteries were filled with people. The Lithuanians followed their ancient tradition, they paid respect to their dead without priests, regardless of the fury of the Party Militia which arrested many in their mad rage.

On Sundays, declared to be working days, everyone, including civil servants and school children, went to church, knowing full well the penalty. In Prienai, students reporting to school on All Souls' Day found a scribbled message tacked on the door: "Stalin's constitution grants freedom of conscience, therefore believers need not attend classes"—so all the students went to church. Numerous arrests and dismissals from school followed.

Public prayers were a custom during the school year. Now, just as soon as the teachers left the classrooms, they were again recited.

The bishops did not dismiss former chaplains from their duties. Unable to teach the doctrines of the Church in schools, the chaplains transferred their pastoral activities, after classes, into churches and sacristies. The chaplain of Alytus organized a Retreat on Good Friday. To prevent attendance, the Communist Party ordered the faculty of the school to organize an anti-religious lecture on that date and ordered all students to attend the mass-meeting. The teachers and a few pupils showed up. A teacher related afterward: "A little girl sat in front of me during the harrangue reading a booklet in her lap. I was curious and looked over her shoulder. It was the national religious classic of Lent songs—Graudûs Verksmai."

The ecclesiastic authorities did not dismiss the students of the seminaries. As some students dispersed, new idealists replaced them. Divinity students lived privately and attended lectures in churches, sacristies and private quarters. The NKVD made preparations to foreclose all private religious instruction, but the war intervened.

The first Russian occupation lasted one year. Pozdniakov's prophecy of the Soviet regime achieving within a two-three year period the results gained by the anti-religious campaign in Russia during 20 years, did not materialize, because of the spontaneous and determined resistance.

However, a heavy blow was delivered to religious life in Lithuania during the one year: 10% of the priests were eliminated, forcibly separated from their people. Of these, 15 priests were brutally tortured and murdered, 9 were exiled to Siberia. The majority of laymen active in Catholic Action were either murdered or exiled to Siberia. 40,000 Lithuanians were deported to Russia during that one lone year, and at least two-thirds of the number were Catholic Action members.

The Second Russian Occupation

● 795
626

As far back as 1942, Comrade Vyshynsky, Deputy Commissar of Foreign Affairs and Liquidator of the Democratic Latvian State, admitted to a foreign statesman that bolshevik tactics in the Baltic States were based on an erroneous policy: the method of violence and compulsion had been a mistake.

In July 1944, the Russians again invaded the Baltic States. However, there was no change in their policy or methods regarding religion: they permitted no Catholic organizations, press or instruction of religion in schools.

The Salesian monastery at Skirsnemunė was encircled by the Red Army and all physically able friars were drafted into the Red Army.

Soon thereafter, the tactics regarding the clergy wavered. Soviet overlords attempted to maintain, to some extent, the propaganda thesis regarding the alleged existence of "freedom of religion" in the Soviet Union. Only one Catholic Seminary, of the former four, was left in Lithuania, but divinity students, as other university students, were exempt from military duty. The number of divinity students was sharply limited to 150—for a Catholic nation of three million —instead of the previous 850.

This measure represented a lull in the anti-religious drive: religion was to be eliminated by other means, by mass deportations of the faithful and their replacement by Communist Russians, so that, in the words of comrade Pozdniakov, the priests would find no employment for their vocation, no audience to listen to them. By effecting the primary aim of the Soviet regime—the liquidation of the Lithuanian people—the secondary aim, that of abolishing religion, would be simultaneously achieved. This explains the change in tactics, not the basic aim.

Furthermore, the new "party line" sought not merely to leave the clergy untouched, but to use them for political interests of bolshevism, as is done in Russia with the Orthodox clergy. In 1946 the NKVD encountered great difficulty with armed Lithuanian guerrilla operations. The NKVD decided to use the bishops and clergy to break the fighters' will to wage war. The Ministry of Interior (NKVD-MVD) demanded that the bishops publish pastoral letters and in sermons condemn the armed resistance and urge an end to it.

The alien regime attempted to attain two purposes: to enlist the clergy's aid to further its plans, and to drive a wedge between the clergy and the fighting nation. However, the plan was too obviously underlined with "red" threads, and the bishops declined to do the NKVD bidding. When the NKVD threatened with repressions, one bishop frankly told the satraps: "It is all the same to me whether I live five more years or less—I shall not soil the authority of the Church."

The Anti-Religious Drive Intensified

When the Church hierarchy refused to be drawn to the "party line," Russian tactics once more underwent a change and returned to the policy of outright oppression.

Half of the surviving bishops of Lithuania were arrested: Bishop Borisevičius of Telšiai, his Suffragan Bishop Ramanauskas, and Bishop Theophilius Matulionis of Kaišiadorys. The latter suffered his second martyrdom at the hands of the Russians: previously he had spent 12 years in Russian dungeons and slave labor camps until, in 1933, he was exchanged for a Soviet spy sentenced in Lithuania for subversive activities.

There are two versions regarding the fate of Bishop Borisevičius. Officially, he was sentenced to death. However, repatriated German prisoners of war state that they saw the bishop in a slave labor gang cutting timber in the Far East, together with several other Lithuanian Monsignori and priests.

The aged bishop of Vilkavišk is, Antanas Karosas, is now living in Marijampolė, retired from active duties. Archbishop Karevičius died soon after the second Russian invasion. Archbishop Romuald Jałbrzykowski of Vilnius was repatriated to Poland to administer the sections of the Vilnius Archbishopric left in a reduced Poland. Archbishop Skvireckas, Metropolitan of Lithuania, together with Bishop Brizgys of Kaunas and Co-Adjutor Bishop Podolskis of Vilkavišk is, are in exile in Western Europe. Bishop Mečys Reinys of Vilnius, according to a Tass bulletin, is said to be alive in Vilnius. There is no information whatsoever regarding Bishop Paltarokas of Panevėžys. Mgr. Juodaitis is administering the Bishopric of Telšiai.

If Bishop Paltarokas is still living, only two bishops remain in Lithuania—20% of the pre-war hierarchy. Of course, this does not prevent Tass from claiming that "The Catholic Church organization has remained unchanged. . . ."

During the latter part of 1946, the Soviet press vilely attacked the Catholic Church and the clergy. Lithuanian priests were accused of supporting the guerrillas—"political bandits" and "Lithuanian-German nationalists." The NKVD instituted numerous prosecution processes against priests and gave the widest publicity to the charges. Priests were sentenced to 10 years in hard labor prisons and deported to Russia.

The terror, by the end of the year 1946, was greater than during the first occupation: 25 priests were murdered, 40 were sentenced to hard labor and deported, 150 priests are in hiding.

Through murders, imprisonment, deportations and exile, Lithuania has lost the services of at least 350 priests—that is, 22% of all priests in the country in 1940.

Bishop Ramanauskas of Telšiai went to the NKVD in Vilnius to inquire about the fate of his superior, Bishop Borisevičius. He was told that the Bishop was sentenced to death. He returned to Telšiai. He was arrested by the NKVD immediately after holding Holy Mass. With his hands tied behind his back, he was pushed into an auto, driven to the railroad station, and placed on board a train.

Bishop Matulionis was arrested in mid-December 1946. The old martyr bore himself with dignity and firmness. To warnings by well-wishers he replied: "I know the bolsheviks." He had ordained some divinity graduates December 9 and 12th, and appeared very weak. He was arrested a few days later for having issued a pastoral letter warning against the wiles of Komsomol.

Arrests of the clergy are more numerous after several visits to "Prime Minister" Gedvila to protest against limiting the number of divinity students to 150. The seminary's building is being requisitioned: its quarters in Marian Fathers' Charity Church are being turned over to Nurses School.

A favorite Russian method is to promote dissension. When Rev. Nagulevičius, pastor of Obeliai, was arrested, the NKDV lodged a suspended priest in the rectory. This "pastor" refused to admit the priest appointed by the bishop. The Chancellor of the diocese arrived to settle the matter, but the NKVD "pastor" refused to obey. When the Chancellor visited comrade Gailevičius, Adviser on Cult Affairs in Vilnius, the latter said: "At present the people rule. This is apparently the people's will, and we cannot help in this matter."

The NKVD is attempting to install its own "priests" and, eventually, to have a Church administration subservient to the NKVD. Thus far, only one apostate is known.

No priests are admitted to the Klaipėda-Memel District.

Congregations are being evicted from their quarters although, officially, the monasteries are not banned. St. Casimir's Sisters are still in posiession at Pažaislis, and the Franciscan Fathers are still left in Kretinga.

Priests and Church property are heavily taxed. For instance, the Cathedral of Kaunas must pay 46,000 rubles, the Cathedral of Panevėžys 40,000, the small Church of St. Nicholas in Vilnius dating back to the 14th century, is taxed 16,000 rubles. The late Mgr. Jokubauskas, administrator of the Bishopric of Kaunas who died in February 1947, was taxed 20,000 rubles. The figures become significant when it is realized that an average laborer earns 200 rubles a month.

Sidelights of Anti-Religious Drive

Religious practice is permitted inside the church only: Stalin's constitution grants "freedom of belief" and warrants the liberty of anti-religious propaganda. No religious texts, not even prayerbooks, are permitted to be published—"paper shortage" . . . On the other hand millions of vile pamphlets are printed.

Once more, uniformed sentinels and agents in mufti are ostentatiously posted at church doors. They look over every face and scribble notes in the "blocnotes." Attendance in church means dismissal from a responsible post in the government. Teachers attending religious services are denounced in the press as "persons of low morality." A high school director inquired of the Ministry of Education whether he could attend religious services. The reply was: "As an individual—yes, as a State employee—No."

Churches in the cities are crowded. In rural areas—the churches are nearly vacant. This is because people are afraid to leave their homes because of robberies and thefts by the Russians and Party members. On Sundays, even uniformed soldiers and militiamen (police) are openly engaging in robberies.

A vigorous campaign against priests and the Vatican was instituted since December 1946. The Pope, the Vatican, and Christian morality and ways of life are vilely denounced. In 1947, the Vatican became the "cradle of international reaction": the button pressed in Moscow echoes everywhere under the Russian occupation.

Translators immediately put out literature in the Lithuanian language. Tiesa, the official organ of the Communist Party and "government," in its #43 issue denounced the institution of Papacy as a partner of imperialists and exploiters: "The Pope was partner of the gangs of Teutonic crusaders," "During World War II, the Pope supported Hitler, the worst enemy of the Lithuanian people," "the clergy are the worst exploiters and enemies of the people."

Christian morality is also abused but "bolshevik morality" (?) is praised. For instance, Bolševikiniu Keliu (On the Bolshevik Path, No. 6/12) of 28 February 1947 wrote:

"The working people of a socialist country are creating their own new morality, basically differing from religious morality. Our morality is based on the struggle for Communism. . . . Morality is the means for destroying the exploiting society and uniting the working people around the proletariat which is forming a new Communist society. Hatred for the oppressors and enslavers . . . these are the wonderful peculiarities of our morality."

Certainly, a remarkable resemblance to Nazi "morality". . . .

The people of Lithuania entertain no illusions: the publicity drive against religion presages a new wave of arrests and deportations and purges. Indeed, since February 1947 mass dismissals from State employment—and every concern is a State concern—began.

798 771 883

The Lithuanian people met the second anti-religious drive with passive resistance, just as during the first occupation. The "purges" are met with heroic stoicism. Churches remain filled with the faithful, regardless of the "friendly reminders" by Communist overlords to avoid the "inconveniences" and "hardships." Religious conferences for school children go on in churches, and the Komsomol is boycotted. Anti-religious "lectures" are attended only under compulsion. Teachers support the Komsomol only under direct pressure. Tiesa, the Soviet official mouthpiece, voiced its concern (12 February 1947):

"Komsomol meetings in the II Gymnasium of Šiauliai are infrequent. The Komsomol youths' attendance is deficient—a recent meeting was attended by only 5 members out of 13. We asked comrade Baravykaitė,

798 a Komsomol girl, why her sister did not attend. She 771 blushed, did not dare to speak, finally she admitted:
883 'She is afraid.'

"—What do you mean, afraid?

"In the 4th Class there are 2 Komsomol members, but the influence of the reactionary Catholic clergy is very strong among the students of that class. The girls attend church and classes in religion arranged by the priests. Only members of the Komsomol do not attend, and they are persecuted for this reason.

"Reactionary Catholic clergymen built a strong nest in the II Gymnasium. They send out invitations to attend church where religion is taught to students. The teachers could not be unaware of this, yet they do nothing about it."

The Soviet mouthpiece recommended the purging of the teaching staff.

771 The Lithuanian People may suffer long martyrdom for Christianity. Nevertheless, they are encouraged by the sharpening ideological exchanges reflected in the Soviet press. They continue to sing with unfathomable emotion their classic religious hymn:

"Marija, Marija, skaisčiausia Lelija . . .
Palengvink vergiją, pagelbėk žmonijai,
Išgelbėk nuo priešo baisaus . . .

"Oh, Mary, Mary, most immaculate Lily . . .
Ease enslavement, help humanity,
Save from the terrible enemy . . ."

800 If this struggle lasts much longer and the Lithuanians and the other Baltic peoples do not receive help from those who guaranteed to nations and to individuals freedom of worship, then the Baltic peoples will be exterminated. Only their unshakable loyalty to their religious convictions and to liberty, will remain as an example; perhaps to some, more sensitive souls—as a qualm of conscience.

What is taking place in Lithuania and the other Baltic States today is only a reproduction in miniature of the great ideological conflict which is shaking the world: the conflict of religion against anti-religion; a continuation of the conflict of democracy and freedom against totalitarianism and moral and physical slavery. As Mr. Alexander Clifford says in his very significant article in the continental edition of the "Daily Mail" (May 7, 1947): "Make No Mistake, This Is War—A Holy War."
